What do I do now?

I've just finished my English Literature degree at the University of East London, and I'm going travelling in Southeast Asia for three months in May.

How did I achieve this?

I've always worked hard in school, sixth form and at university. I've always aimed as high as possible to achieve good grades, and all it takes is believing in yourself and having faith that you can do it. I've done work experience at magazines during summer holidays, and volunteering with children. A degree AND experience will open more doors.

What is my advice?

My advice to current pupils is: Dare to dream! There is nothing deaf people can't do. Aim high, work hard and good things will come.
